THE JOURNAL OF SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO THE DPRK A. M. PUZANOV

for the period 16 through 30 August 1957

Pyongyang

SECRET

17 August

I visited Nam Il. I presented him with a memorandum that the Soviet government had agreed with the DPRK government proposal to hold Soviet-Korean talks about concluding a convention for the settlement of border issues in Pyongyang in September 1957, and also about the composition of the Soviet delegation.

After familiarizing himself with the memorandum, Nam Il noted, "a good composition of the delegation".

In accordance with MFA instructions I asked Nam Il to express an opinion about what approximate time would be advisable to send Soviet specialists to the DPRK to help prepare measures connected with the exchange of old banknotes for new ones, as the DPRK government had made a request about this.

Nam Il said that he would consult and report next week.

Nam Il asked whether the Embassy had received copies of the [case] history of his sons' illness, about which Kim Il Sung had asked a few days ago in order to explore the possibility of sending them to a Soviet country boarding school for treatment and to continue [their] studies.

I replied to Nam Il that copies of the [case] history of the illness of his sons Yuriy and Nikolay had been sent to us today, I will send them to Moscow via diplomatic pouch today, August 17th, and the request of the leadership was telegraphed to the MFA today.

Nam Il expressed gratitude.
