

January 27, 1990

Bulgaria: Reform Leaders Battle Hardliners

Citation:

“Bulgaria: Reform Leaders Battle Hardliners,” January 27, 1990, History and Public Policy Program Digital Archive, Approved for Release by the Central Intelligence Agency, October 29, 2019.
<https://digitalarchive.wilsoncenter.org/document/209538>

Summary:

An analysis of the break down of a National Assembly session after disputes within the Communist Party. An analysis of the break down of a National Assembly session after disputes within the Communist Party.

Original Language:

English

Contents:

- Scan of Original Document

1072

~~Top Secret~~

6.2(d)

NR Record

BULGARIA: Reform Leaders Battle Hardliners

Bulgaria's reform-minded leadership is pushing ahead with change despite growing opposition within the Communist Party. After the conclusion of an unscheduled Central Committee plenum Thursday night called to discuss the crisis in the party, Sofia announced yesterday that Communist Party organizations in the Army would be disbanded. After a National Assembly session broke down on Thursday, the chairman of the Assembly explained that a broad consensus between opposition forces and the Communist Party was needed before the Assembly could adopt new measures. The Politburo released no other details on the Central Committee session, but a Western press source indicates that party leaders advocated forming a coalition government with the opposition. [redacted]

6.2(d)

Comment: The breakdown of the Assembly session shows that opponents of reform are becoming more vocal and probably will challenge the leadership at next week's extraordinary party congress. By endorsing a coalition government, reformist party leaders probably are trying to line up support among the opposition so they can defeat any attempt by hardliners to regain power. A coalition could lead to inclusion of the opposition in the government as early as next week. [redacted]

6.2(d)

~~Top Secret~~
TCS 2722/90
27 January 1990